FINANCIAL ASSISTANCE FOR YOUR FAMILY BUSINESS DURING DIVORCE

VANCOUVER, B.C. (May 26, 2014) – The Divorce Financial Planners (DFP) group believes it is essential that you receive professional advice for your family business during a divorce. Not doing so could underserve the needs of all involved.

Divorce can be a stressful process and having a family business in the mix only adds to the issues that must be addressed. Not only must a decision be made as to the value of the business but such considerations as who will retain and run it and how will suppliers, employees, shareholders and others view the process must be looked at. It can take years to build up the value of the business; you do not want to let that value decline by not “minding the store”.

For helpful information about the need to include a financial professional during this process, see: <http://www.biv.com/article/20130625/BIV0107/306259930/0/BIV0330>

Do not let your family business be a casualty of divorce.
